

How to Win Your Ex-Boyfriend Back

Contributed by Michelle Jordan
Wednesday, 12 September 2007
Last Updated Wednesday, 10 October 2007

Usually after breakup there is a feeling of emptiness and seems nothing else matters besides answer to question - how to win your ex boyfriend back? It might even become as obsessive thought that will influence other everyday tasks and even your job and relationship with friends but before you jump into any action try to understand that persistence in this situation will not help but make it even worse especially if you try to beg and promise to change if there was something that your boyfriend didn't like particularly.

Best approach after breakup if you plan to work on regaining this relationship is to make it happen on positive wave instead of making it something depressing and making your ex feel bad about. This is a way of not burning your bridges with him and make him wonder how come you are not upset about this breakup. Some mystery always helps as it plants continuous questions about something that he can't understand which brings to main goal of making him think about you. Just smile and tell him you are not upset and will love to keep in touch but don't beg him to change his mind and show signs of depression because of such turn of events.

Next step to understand how to win your ex boyfriend back is analyzing what went wrong in your relationship with your ex lover. And quite essential part of this step is to avoid any contact with him. This will increase his interest since he can't understand why you didn't make a scene out of this and didn't start calling him continuously to make him change his mind. This stereotype of breakup scenario is something everyone expects but if it goes differently makes person who initiated breakup wonder what's happening and why it isn't happening as it usually would.

Now try to remember what clinched for both of you back then when you started dating as it is essential and will help you in planning your comeback later on. But main thing you have to understand is where did you go wrong and especially when this relationship started to fade. Usually it's not so easy task especially for emotionally involved people who are completely in love with their lovers as everything seems great and many things even those little obstacles go unnoticed. Asking your ex is not the best idea because we need to avoid any contact for some time after breakup and usually your ex will not be so eager to discuss this topic as it will be increasing those negative feelings between him and you. That's why you need either expert advice to your mission of how to win your ex boyfriend back or good informative source that will help you find those turn off points in your relationship on your own and find out reasons of this breakup.

If you are considering your friends as experts then I can assure you that in most cases this will not help as television these days has programmed us to specific stereotypes of behaviour which in real life don't work. There are of course some exceptions and usually those are girls that are very good with men and know how to control them. If you have such friend then you can try getting advice from her. But best choice in this case of course are professional experts in dating who have studied human psychology and behaviour and have experience that will make analyzing of your mistakes easy and planning your comeback very specific and effective. But one problem with such experts is that they cost money and can go up to 300$ per hour for very good expert and getting an appointment with them can take some time as well.

So what I found very helpful was "Win Back Love" ebook that I found on the internet. It also included checklist of possible reasons why relationships go wrong to help analyzing my breakup reasons. And now I am so glad I found this book because I managed to get my ex back in a matter of 2 months. Appeared that he found some new interest at the time and for some time he was more interested in her but because I didn't end our relationship on bad wave as recommended and made lots of things that made him think about us more than about her it was just matter of time to make him call me and in the end it happened like it was his idea of getting back.

Visit "Win Back Love" to learn more about how to win your ex boyfriend back and get a free course on biggest breakup mistakes.